

Dinner With Barry

In need of cash to pay for $1 billion worth of “We’re making progress... but I need four more years” campaign advertisements, Obama has a new scheme: donate $5 to his campaign and win a chance to have dinner with Obama.

Well, actually it’s not a new scheme. Obama did it in 2008 as well, breaking the law in the process. This time his lawyers found a way to make the money-making gimmick legal: the fine print includes a statement—in very small print—that one can enter the contest without actually donating any money.

Obama will no doubt rake in bundles of cash with the email appeal, and at the same time add tens of thousands (hundreds of thousands? millions?) of emails to his database of useful idiots—those dim-witted imbeciles he can most easily usher onto the trains headed for the work camps needed by his New [Islamist] World Order.

Most Americans who oppose Obama will laugh off this silly contest like they laugh off his ludicrous claims that the economy is recovering and he is entitled to all the credit. But I suggest that, rather than ignore the scheme, all patriotic, red-blooded, liberty-loving, Obama opponents enter the contest and include valid contact information. The Obama database could grow by tens of millions of names, and the thug-in-chief’s unrealistically enthusiastic campaign staffers will actually believe he is recapturing the magic of 2008 and has a shot at winning reelection! Better yet, the more entries by people who oppose the Hope-and-Change regime, the greater the chances that one of them will win dinner with Barry Hussein Obama Soetoro Obama—or whatever the heck his real name is.

In the event I win, I certainly know what I will do: I will walk up to Barry, refuse to shake his hand, remind him that he works for me, tell him I heard a lot about him from Larry Sinclair, and ask why he is using a stolen Social Security number.

I sure hope the Secret Service lets me bring my cell phone camera...
