

The Chief Goes On The Warpath

Apparently the United States Senate has nothing better to do than waste taxpayer dollars on nonsense:

ABCNews.com reported, "The Senate Indian Affairs committee will hold a hearing Thursday on racist Native American stereotypes, a hearing that will now also address the Osama bin Laden mission and the code-name Geronimo. Loretta Tuell, the committee's chief counsel, states, "The hearing was scheduled well before the Osama bin Laden operation became news, but the concerns over the linking of the name of Geronimo, one of the greatest Native American heroes, with the most hated enemies of the United States is an example of the kinds of issues we intended to address at Thursday's hearing. These inappropriate uses of Native American icons and cultures are prevalent throughout our society, and the impacts to Native and non-Native children are devastating. We intend to open the forum to talk about them."

Representatives of PETA (People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals) will be present to voice their opposition to the use of the term Navy "SEALs."

The hearing will include testimony from one of Osama bin Laden's wives, who was heard screaming, "Who were those masked men?"

Appearing before the committee for censure will be residents of Abbottabad, Pakistan who, upon hearing the approaching Apache helicopters, exclaimed, "We are being attacked by the Indians!"

Committee chairman Daniel Akaka (D-HI) has asked that all members refrain from wearing Arrow shirts. Akaka has also demanded that the U.S. military find a new name for its Tomahawk missiles.

It is unclear whether "Chief" counsel Tuell will apologize for her offensive title.
