The American Crisis

Tyranny, Like Hell, Is Not Easily Conquered

A Call To Take Action

Number Eighteen

Since January 20, 2009, Americans have gone through hell under Barack Hussein Obama. When the present American Crisis comes to an end with the defeat of the DemocRATS in November 2014, the impeachment of the tyrant Barack Hussein Obama and his trial for treason, and hopefully the defeat of the DemocRATS in the election of 2016, WE the People will truly learn what fetters have bound US since January 20, 2009.

With the surrender of the British Army under the command of General Charles Cornwallis to General George Washington, commander of the American Revolutionary Army, at Yorktown, Virginia on October 18, 1781, the times that tried men's souls for more than five years were over and the greatest and most complete revolution the world ever knew, gloriously and happily accomplished. Under the tyrannical regime of Barack Hussein Obama, America is in its second times that try men's souls. Sadly enough, there is no general in sight to defeat him. Therefore, it is the responsibility of WE the People, American Patriots all, and the few patriotic supporters in the United States Congress to defeat Barack Hussein Obama. Yet, Barack Hussein Obama's tentacle tyranny, like hell, is not to be easily conquered.

To pass in the 1770s and 1780s from the extremes of danger to safety, from the tumult of war to the tranquility of peace, though sweet in contemplation, required a gradual composure of the senses to receive it. This is also the present situation. The same atmosphere will come upon the United States of America when Barack Hussein Obama and the DemocRATS are ousted from political power. Happiness will immediately ensue!

Even calmness has the power of stunning when it opens too instantly upon us. The long and raging hurricane that should cease in a moment would leave us in a condition rather of wonder than enjoyment; and some moments of recollection must pass before we could be capable of tasting the felicity of repose. There are but few instances in which the mind is fitted for sudden transitions. It takes in its pleasures by reflection and comparison and those must have time to act before the relish for new scenes is complete.

In the present case, the mighty magnitude of the object, the various uncertainties of fate it has undergone, the numerous and complicated dangers WE the People have suffered or escaped, the eminence WE now stand on, and the vast prospect before US, must all conspire to impress US with contemplation.

To see it in OUR power to make a world happy; to teach mankind the art of being so; to exhibit, on the theatre of the universe a rebirth of American character hitherto unknown; and to have, as it were, a new creation entrusted to OUR hands, are honors that command reflection and can neither be too highly estimated, nor too gratefully received. In this pause of recollection while the storm is ceasing, and the long agitated mind vibrating to a rest, let us look back on the scenes we have passed, and learn from experience what is yet to be done.

Never, I say, had a country so many openings to happiness as the United States of America. This nation's setting out in life, like the rising of a fair morning, was unclouded and promising. Her cause was good. Her principles just and liberal. Her temper serene and firm. Her conduct regulated by the nicest steps, and everything about her wore the mark of honor. It is not every country – perhaps there is not another in the world – that can boast so fair an origin. The first settlements of America corresponded with the character of the American Revolution. The present settlements, many of them controlled over generations by DemocRATS, have so far not repeated that colonial character. Nevertheless, America need never be ashamed to tell her birth, nor relate the stages by which she rose to greatness.

Rome, once the mistress of the universe, was originally a band of ruffians. Plunder and rapine made her rich, and her oppression of millions was the foundation of the empire. The Barack Hussein Obama regime is the Rome of today's American world.

The remembrance of what is past, if it operates rightly, must inspire America with the most laudable of all ambition: that of adding to the fair fame with which she began. The world has seen America great in adversity; struggling, without a thought of yielding, beneath accumulated difficulties, bravely, nay proudly, encountering distress, and rising in resolution as the Obama storm increased. All this is justly due to America, for her fortitude has merited her character. Let the world see that once again after Barack Hussein Obama America can produce and bear prosperity, and that her honest virtue in time of peace is equal to the bravest virtue in time of war.

The United States of America should begin a descending to the scenes of quiet and non-government-regulated domestic life. Not beneath the cypress shade of disappointment, but to enjoy in her own land, and under her own vine, the sweetness of her labors, and solving the evilness of government handouts. This will be the reward of her toil in building up America after the demise of Barack Hussein Obama and the DemocRATS. In this situation, may America never forget that a fair, national reputation is of as much importance as is independence; that this nation once again possesses a charm that wins upon the world and makes even enemies civil; that this nation once again gives a dignity which is often superior to power, and commands reverence where pomp and splendor fail.

It would be a circumstance ever to be lamented and never to be forgotten were a single blot, from any cause whatever, suffered to fall on this modern revolution, which to the end of time must be an honor to the age that accomplished it; and which will contribute more to enlighten the world, and diffuse a spirit of freedom and liberality among mankind, than any human event – if this may be called one – that ever preceded it.

It is not among the least of the calamities of a long-continued domestic war that it unhinges the mind from those nice sensations which at other times appear so amiable. The continual spectacle of woe blunts the finer feelings, and the necessity of bearing with the sight renders it familiar. In like manner, are many of the moral obligations of society weakened, till the custom of acting by necessity becomes an apology, where it is truly a crime. Yet, let but a nation conceive anew rightly of its character, and it will be chastely just in protecting it. None ever began with a fairer opportunity than a reborn America and none can be under a greater obligation to preserve it.

The debt which America will have contracted, compared with the cause she has gained, and the advantages to flow from it, ought scarcely to be mentioned. She has it in her choice to do and to live as happily as she pleases after Barack Hussein Obama. The world is in her hands once again. She will have no foreign power to influence her commerce, no usurper to perplex her legislation or control her prosperity. After Obama the struggle is over, which must one day have happened, and, perhaps, never could have happened at a better time. Instead of a domineering master, she will have gained exemplary greatness, and universal acclaim. A new America will exist!

With the blessings of peace, independence, and a universal commerce, the states, individually and collectively, will have leisure and opportunity to regulate and establish their domestic concerns, and to put it beyond the power of calumny to throw the least reflection on their honor. Character is much easier kept than recovered, and that man and woman if any such there be, who, from sinister views, or littleness of soul, lends unseen their hand to injure it, contrives a wound it will never be in their power to heal.

As we have established a new inheritance for posterity, let that inheritance descend with every mark of an honorable conveyance. The little it will cost, compared with the worth of the states, the greatness of the object, and the value of the national character, will be a profitable exchange.

That which must more forcibly strike a thoughtful, penetrating mind, and which includes and renders easy all inferior concerns, is the union of the states against a brutal tyrant and a socialist-communist. On this standpoint OUR great national character depends. It is this which must give US importance abroad and security at home. It is through this only that WE are, or can be, nationally highly regarded in the world; it is the determination, power, and exceptionalism of the United States of America that renders our ships and commerce safe on the seas, or in a foreign port. OUR passes must be obtained under the same style. All OUR treaties, whether of alliance, peace, or commerce, are formed under the sovereignty of the United States of America, not the United Nations of America or the Muslim States of America. Europe, the world, and Islam know OUR nation by no other name or title.

The division of the nation into states was and is for our own convenience. Abroad this distinction ceases. The affairs of each state are local. They can go no further than to each state. Were the whole worth of even the richest of them expended in revenue, it would not be sufficient to support sovereignty against a foreign attack. In short, WE have no other national sovereignty than the United States of America only. It would even be fatal for US if WE had, too expensive to be maintained, and impossible to be supported. Individuals, or individual states, may call themselves what they please; but the world, and especially the world of enemies, is not to be held in awe by the whistling of a name. Sovereignty must have power to protect all the parts that compose and constitute it. As the United States of America, responsible to no other organization, WE are equal to the importance of the title, but otherwise WE are not. OUR union, well and wisely regulated and cemented, is the cheapest way of being great, the easiest way of being continuously powerful, and the happiest invention in government of which the circumstances of America can admit, because it collects from each state, that which, by being inadequate, can be of no use to it, and forms an aggregate that serves for all.

For example, the states of the European Community are an unfortunate instance of the effects of individual sovereignty. Their disjointed condition exposes them to numerous intrigues, losses, calamities, and enemies; and the almost impossibility of bringing their measures to a decision, and that decision into execution, is to them, and would be to US, a source of endless misfortune.

It is with federated states as with individuals in society; something must be yielded up to make the whole secure. In this view of things WE gain by what WE give, and draw an annual interest greater than the capital.

I ever feel myself hurt when I hear the United States of America, that great palladium of our liberty and safety, the least irreverently spoken of. It is the most sacred aspect in the Constitution for the United States of America, and that which every man and woman should be most proud and tender of. OUR citizenship in the United States is our national character. OUR citizenship in any particular state is only OUR local distinction. By the latter WE are known at home, by the former to the world. OUR great title is Americans, legal citizens!

So far as my endeavors could go, they have all been directed to conciliate the affections, unite the interests, and draw and keep the mind of the nation together. The better to assist in this foundation work of the new revolution, I have avoided all places of profit or office, either in the state I live in, or in the United States; kept myself at a distance from all parties and party connections, and even disregarded all private and inferior concerns. When WE Patriots take into view the great work which WE have gone through and will continue, and feel, as WE ought to feel, the just importance of it, WE shall then see that the little wranglings and indecent contentions of personal parley are as dishonorable to OUR characters as they are injurious to OUR repose. The truth carries no injury because it sets US free!

It was the threat of the cancerous tyranny of Barack Hussein Obama and the DemocRATS that made me an author for political action. For those who have supported me, I thank them for their patriotic act. The force with which it struck my mind and the dangerous condition the country appeared to me in, by courting an impossible and an unnatural reconciliation with those who were determined to reduce her, instead of striking out into the only line that could cement and save her, a renewal, reassertion and legalization of the Declaration of Independence, made it impossible for me, feeling as I did, to be silent: and if, in the course of more than seven years I have rendered America any service, I have, I hope, likewise added something to the reputation of literature, by freely and disinterestedly employing it in the great cause of mankind, and showing that there may be genius in patriotism without prostitution.

Independence always appears to me practicable and probable, provided the sentiment of the country can be formed and held to the object. There is no instance in the world where a people so extended and wedded to former habits of thinking, and under such a variety of circumstances, are so instantly and effectually pervaded by a turn in politics, as in the case of independence from Barack Hussein Obama and the DemocRATS. The large portion of Americans support this opinion and will continue undiminished through such a succession of good and ill fortune till it is crowned with success.

That the present, patriotic revolution began at the exact period of time best fitted to the purpose, is sufficiently proved by the event. But the great hinge on which the whole machine turns, is the continuation of the United States of America as a federal structure in a free market economy.

Originally, in the Revolutionary War, this union was naturally produced by the inability of any one colony to support itself against any foreign enemy without the assistance of the rest. Had the present individual states severally been less able than they were when the domestic war began, their united strength would not have been equal to the undertaking, and they must in all human probability have failed. On the other hand, had they severally been more able, they might not have seen, or, what is more, might not have felt, the necessity of uniting against Barack Hussein Obama and the DemocRATS, and, either by attempting to stand alone or in small confederacies, would have been separately defeated.

Now, as WE cannot see a future time (and many years must pass away before it can arrive) when the strength of any one state, or several united, can be equal to the whole of the present United States, and as WE have seen the extreme difficulty of collectively prosecuting the domestic war against Barack Hussein Obama to a successful issue, and preserving OUR national importance in the world, therefore, from the experience WE have had, and the knowledge WE have gained, WE must, unless WE make a waste of wisdom, be strongly impressed with the advantage, as well as the necessity of strengthening that happy union which has been OUR salvation, and without which WE would have become a ruined people.

I have never met with a man or woman who has confessed it as their opinion that a separation of the United States of America from its traditions and Judeo-Christian ethics would take place one time or other. There is no instance in which we have shown less judgment, than in endeavoring to describe what we call the ripeness or fitness of the nation for its continued independence based on the principles of Judeo-Christian teachings and traditions.

As all men and women allow the measure, and differ only in their opinion of the time, let us, in order to remove mistakes, take a general survey of things, and endeavor, if possible, to find out the very time. WE all must become revolters against socialism-communism hope and change. But we need not to go far. The inquiry ceases at once. The time has found us. There is general concurrence. The glorious union of all things prove the fact. It is not in numbers, but in a union, that our great strength lies. The nation is just arrived at that pitch of strength in which no single state is able to support itself, and the whole, when united, can accomplish the matter without Barack Hussein Obama, the anti-patriotic DemocRATS, and their pseudo hope and change. Accomplishing less than this would be fatal in its effects and consequently prove the statement by America's patriot par excellence, Thomas Paine: Tyranny, like Hell, is not easily conquered.
